THE MOUTH OF THE LEAMY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE HEIR OF REDCLYFFE."

CHAPTER VIII.

"There was that he loathed," sighed Amise to herself, but it was all breathed in one inarticulate sigh, and she answered mournfully, "No; it was no fault of poor Captain Stafford's. Ah! Sir Walter, you who know those seas, see you any hope? May they not have rounded the world like Sir Francis Drake, and be yet on their way?"

"I can scarce entertain that hope, fair mistress," sadly said Raleigh. "Stafford was no man to transgress his instructions so widely for glory's sake. Moreover, I have heard tidings from a freshly returned vessel that weigh heavy on me." He paused.

"They cannot be worse than our forebodings," faintly but eagerly said Amise.

"Then it must be told," said Raleigh.—"The Captain of the Gainful Mariner came yesterday to Drake and me with tidings that he had fallen on the hull of a ship that he fully believes to be the Elizabeth, lying off a reef of rocks some ten days' sail from the Azores. He searched the rock, but found no living man there."

"No living man!" repeated Amise.

"Ay, for he found two recent corpses of English seamen, lightly buried in sand, with rocks rolled over it, as might be done by men destitute of tools."

"Then the others—"

"Mark you, Mistress Amise, they had not perished, for if so, some at least had lain unburied. They must have been taken off by some ship,—Spanish or English? that is the question."

Amise could almost have re-echoed the question with a scream, so momentous did she will know it to be. Was it an ignominious death or liberty? But lighter voices came in,—"Spanish or English? Sir Walter, are you the man to put that query?"

And Amise, presently waking from the whirl of emotion, found that the hospitable gentry of the borders of Dartmoor were pressing upon Grace their invitations to bring her mother and Amise farther inland. Every one was explaining the various arrangements for driving the cattle up to the moor, and for the women and children to betake themselves to its valleys on the first alarm of actual landing, and every vehicle, from the Mayoress of Plymouth's coach down to the humblest cart on a country farm, seemed to be ready to be put in requisition. Even Sir Walter Raleigh and Mr. Kirkham, though without the least alarm lest Philip II's invasion should ultimately succeed, thought the lonely mouth of the Leamy might be tempting for those sudden undisciplined descents, most terrible of all for the unprotected, and strongly urged on Grace that she should bring her mother out of reach of the danger.

"If there be need, it shall be done; thanks, my kind uncle," said Grace; "but scarcely as yet. There would be more certain danger to my mother in attempting to move her, and, even were it not so, an untimely flight would dishearten our tenants."

"There spoke the Queen's true subject," said Mr. Kirkham, grasping his niece's hand; "you are right, Grace; flee not when no man pursueth! We at Plymouth, and Hawkins and the rest of us on the look-out at the Scillies, will send you ample notice if there were pressing danger."

"Lack-a-day!" sighed a mincing, fluttering young dame, whose high-crowned hat and yellow-laced farthingale, with a hoop extending from her moor pony's tail to his nose, wildly imitating Lady Raleigh's of last year; "you have the heart of a lion, Mistress Grace; I should die on the spot if I thought the villain Spaniard's were within a hundred miles of me? I could not sleep sound for a single night down there on the coast. I call it a sin. What can render her so headstrong, Amise?"

"Fears for our mother," said Amise.

"Our mother! She is none of yours," repeated the bride; "You are not bound to her or to Undercliff. Come up to us, Amise; we have plenty of young sparks forever with us, and are as merry as the day is long, with music and dancing to drive fear away! And my brother Harry would be your devoted servant. Ah!—"

For Amise, taking advantage of some movement among the horses, had slipped out of her young lady-ship's neighborhood, and was on the other side of Mr. Kirkham's broad back.

The lady, however, rattled on to Raleigh; "Ah! poor little Amise Colyton knows not what manners are, and no wonder, mumping forever in that narrow hole. So fair and wealthy as she is, too! One would have thought she would have deemed herself well quit of so lubberly a fellow as Mark Lynch; but they do say that the sailor-gentleman had stolen her heart, and belike he did, for sport must have been scant at Undercliff. However, be that as it may, 'tis more folly to sit in a corner weeping over spilt cream, and Grace Lynch ought not to be so self-seeking as to allow it! I shall speak to Master Kirkham. He has some power with them, and did Harry win her he were a made man."

But ere the lady's long speech was ended, the throng was melting away, and the troops were joined by their leaders, and led away to meet again so soon as a beacon on the Hoe should give warning of the first sight of the enemy.

CHAPTER IX.

THE SPANISH DESCENT.

The beacon had blazed! Drake's game at bowls had been played out. The night was over of which we have heard, "Such night in England ne'er hath been and ne'er again shall be"; the men of the Undercliff estate were with the train-bands on the watch under Mr. Kirkham's command, and the Leamy at full tide glistened tranquilly in the July sun, the swans sailed majestically beneath the wooded banks on the opposite side, and Grace was supporting Mrs. Lynch as she walked along the garden, and, as Amise cut the lavender, babbled of laying them round those first shirts to which her infant Mark was soon to take instead of his swaddling clothes.

Amise with her basket was somewhat in advance, and had turned a corner of the garden out of sight, when suddenly, with a startled face, pale cheeks, and panting breath, she flew back, and laying her hand on Grace's arm, gasped out, "O Grace! they are come! They are in the river!—Old Kelland knows she is of Spanish build. Dick is come to warn us. But they are putting out a boat. O Grace! what shall we do?"

"What is it? What does she say?—Nothing wrong with Baby Mark!" asked the mother.

"No, no, mother," said Grace, in the usual persuasive voice in which she spoke to her. "Only we will come up the hill, Amise, child, run on. You know what we fixed. You and the maids up into the cavern. I will bring her when she will move."

"With you! I will not leave you!" cried Amise, trying to get Mrs. Lynch's other arm into her own, and thus to drag her on to a cavern, amid rocks and trees some half mile up the river, where there was little chance of any Spaniard penetrating.

"Who is she? What would she? Why does she not cut the lavender to scent my babe's shirts?" demanded Mrs. Lynch, fretfully withdrawing her arm.

Amise wrung her hands with despair.

"Foolish wench," said Grace, but still tenderly, "see you not that you are one of my worst cares? Off! Fear not for us. I will bring her as well as I can, and God will help me and save us."

"Together, or not at all, wildly cried Amise. "Oh! for some one to carry her!"

The boy had run down to the house with his terrible tidings, and the maids flocked out in terror, some running up to their mistress, some rushing up the hill to the woods, and Grace was endeavoring to make her voice heard.

"Amise—Molly, any of you—to the stables. Harness the horse to any cart you can see. You, Jenny, help me to carry her down to it. So we may yet reach the cave. Never mind the stuff."

Grace's presence of mind so far prevailed, that Amise had sprung off to the stable to execute her part of the design, and Jenny, a stout country girl, was about to lift the old lady off the ground, when there was a redoubled shriek, and on the water's edge, on the steps from the garden, Grace beheld a dark figure in the too well-known garb of a Spaniard.

The maids, one and all, crowding scream upon scream, fled headlong, and Grace was left alone with the helpless, unconscious figure on her arm. She saw instantly that flight was out of the question, and that the slight remnant of Spanish chivalry was the only hope. She courtesied with dignity, that she might make it evident that she was of the gentle blood, to which the Spaniards were wont sometimes to accord mercy, and had begun to speak, little hope as there was of his understanding English. "Sir, I entreat mercy for—"

But with outstretched arms he sprang on, dropped on his knee at their feet, clasped his hands above his head, with a wild cry, "Mother, mother! Grace! Don't you know me? Where's my father?—Where's Amise?"

Ere, however, Grace had done more than sob out one "Mark!" her mother was clinging to her in terror. "What is it? Who is he, child? He is a rude stranger. Where's your father? Where is little Mark?"—and her eyes roamed over the garden as if seeking her infant and his nurse, to protect them from the intruder.

"Mother, I am here! I am Mark. O mother! your blessing," cried Mark, still kneeling and trying to seize and kiss the withered hand; but this only added to her terror, no less than did Grace's earnest assurances that Mark, her son Mark, was indeed before her. They confused her.—She pushed both son and daughter aside with hasty, trembling hands, bade Grace not hinder her, for she must go to the child when strange men were about, and set off with hurried, tottering steps along the terrace.

The tears were running down Mark's cheeks as he rose to his feet, and imploringly calling, would have reached and withheld her; but Grace laid her hand on him. "It would terrify her to death," she said. "No; do not follow too fast; she might harry and fall. Oh! Mark; poor Mark, what a return! But thank God!"

And Grace, strained in her brother's arms, tasted of one moment at least of intense, exclusive joy, ere she was forced to hear and reply to his agonized question, "How long has it been thus?"

"For two whole years. Long before our father's death."

"Dear Mark, it was a peaceful decay.—The malady must needs have had its course. He left his blessing for you."

Mark groaned aloud.

"Come in, brother," entreated Grace.—"She may yet know you in the house. Take off that Spanish beaver,—put back your hair. O, if you could for a moment look like the Mark who went! Why so Spanish?" she added.

"We were captured, and rose on the crew of our captor," said Mark. "No other clothes could we come by. I forgot the terror they might cause."

"Come to your own chamber; don your own clothes; then, perhaps—" began Grace, her heart beating to know who was included in that see.

"Alack! no, Grace; not now. We must be up in time for the battle with the Spaniard," said Mark hurriedly. "There is not an hour to lose. Stafford" (Grace's question was answered, and her heart leapt up again) "would not even put into the Sound after what he heard at Falmouth, but granted me these two hours, while he sets the treasure ashore, that I might run in with the boat, and hear—"

He was moving towards the house all the time, Grace clinging to his arm, and pressing it fondly, as his last words ended in a groan.

By this time the panic had begun to subside. Amise, having first been told that the enemy was come, and had seized on Mistress Grace, and then, as she rushed out of the court, had met another maid hysterically shrieking that the old lady was running about demented, had thereupon turned, on a sudden impulse, to take the care of the helpless one, whom she found in the hall trembling, but crooning over her old murmur, "Where, where was her baby, Mark?"

Amise had gently taken her hand to soothe, and, if possible, lead her away, when the wonderful sight came before her eyes of Grace, rosy, tearful, yet ineffably happy, on the arm of—of— Dark, browned, black-bearded as he was, Amise had no doubt and no dread; but, turning crimson, she stood fast-rooted to the spot. She, whom he had loathed and fled, how could she speak the welcome to his home?

He seemed to look for none from her. Only he stepped towards her, grasped her hand in both his, and said. "Fear nothing from me, Amise Colyton. These years have taught me how much better a choice you made than of me! If God give us the victory in the coming strife, he shall be with you, and I!—I will trouble you no more."

A burning kiss was on Amise's hand.—Mark was gone! His appearance would have seemed a mere phantom, but that in Amise's hand was laid one gold ring from a much larger finger, and from her own was gone her own betrothal ring.

Amise wept in agony that evening; and Grace's deadly whiteness might be due to the perils in which she knew her brother to be engaged.

CHAPTER X.

WHICH?

"She is yours," said Mark, as climbing up the sides of the ship he laid his hand on Stafford's shoulder.

"How," began Stafford, eagerly wringing his hand.

"How me no hows," hastily answered Mark. "How? Why my father is dead, my mother is doating, my love's faithless. Is not that how enough for you? You will see it soon enough, without maddening me with pity."

"Mark!"

But Mark had moved out of reach of a confidential murmur into the midst of the sailors, and merely replied by touching his hat and standing ready for orders. Stafford knew his mood, and though burning with gratitude and pity, durst not break in on it. Indeed, it was a night of little talk or repose. All sail was crowded on, and the Santa Clara was hastened in the track of the Armada, whose mighty crescent-formed squadrons had swept up the Channel. The prisoners had all been set ashore on one of the many islets of the "still vexed Bermoothes," where there was no danger of their not subsisting until some Spanish ship should pick them up. Only Adrian Vankirke had been retained, since from the murmurs of the crew it was gathered that they would have revenged on him their capture by the heretics, whom he had been so romantic as to take on board; and he still secretly convalescent, sat on deck, marvelling at the audacity of Stafford, and alert to interfere to save him and his crew as his own captives, should need so require.

All the summer night they sailed, and saw the early sun rise over a sea still blue and lonely, but ere he had reached his full height, there were booming sounds as of thunder in spite of the blue sky; and by and by, white clouds of smoke came rolling over the sea, flashes irradiating them from time to time, while now and then a forest of masts appeared above, to be quickly concealed again.

The excitement of the young men, Vankirke and all, was exceeding; but Stafford, wild as were Mark and almost all the sailors to be in the fray, would not move forward till he could perceive through the smoke where was a fit interval for bearing down into the midst. Ignorant as he was of the plan of attack, he was anxious to discern the flag-ship, and there place himself under orders, and he further knew that in spite of the English flag obtained in haste at Falmouth, there was peril to him in the height of the melee, from the unmistakably Spanish appearance of his ship.

After a time the flashes became less frequent, the smoke less dense; the English vessels, often with sorely tattered sails, began to show forth plainer; in fact the cessation on their part was, as Stafford shrewdly guessed, for want of powder, and as the atmosphere became clearer, so that the green shores of the Isle of Wight grew visible, the English vessels might be seen making for the shelter of the Solent, where they might be able to procure powder from Portsmouth for the next day's fight. The great Spanish ships in their castle-like dignity hovered about slowly in the offing, as though uncertain whether to avenge the insults of the day or proceed according to their original design to their eastward attack.

Almost at the rear of the English, with masts shattered and every token of having born the brunt of the engagement, moved a vessel, whose manœuvres had fixed from the first the eyes of all on board the Santa Clara; and when a huge galley was seen moving forward, as though to cut her off from her companion vessels, Stafford gave the word, and a cheer followed the welcome order for bearing down to the rescue. Before the Spaniards had time to pour one broadside into the now silent English vessel, the Santa Clara lay between, and thundering from all her decks, took her whilom sister utterly by surprise, and after a short sharp fight, brought her as a prize into the Solent.

There the vessels were finding anchorage, and boats busily plying between them and Portsmouth, Cowes, and Ryde, in search of provisions alike for men and guns.

Stafford ordered his boat to be lowered, and commanded the attendance of Mark Lynch, for nothing less than a command would have broken into his silence. They took their two chief prisoners with them, Vankirke and the Spanish captain, and rowed to the flag ship, where they could already discern the assembly of brave captains, there met for council, pacing the deck, and standing to watch their arrival with curiosity, as though they were objects of speculation.

Coming alongside, Stafford stood up, and baring his head, craved permission to come on board and report himself to the Lord Admiral.

"Ha!" cried a well-known voice, as a never-to-be-forgotten figure leant over the bulwarks, "those are tones I never thought to hear again! What! Stafford, man, has come from the dead to help me in my pinch?"

"It was you, then, my dear, noble patron!" cried Stafford. "I doubted me it was your old trick of handling your ship."

And as Stafford swung himself up the ship's side, he was at once clasped in Raleigh's arms, ere the Knight, turning round, presented him with full form of courtesy to the venerable Lord Howard of Effingham, as the gentleman whose timeous aid had done himself at least good service, and as also his excellent friend whose shipwreck he had much feared. Accordingly Stafford was called upon for an account of his adventures, which he narrated in his brief, modest style, pointing out Mark Lynch as the brave volunteer who had carried the rope, and who had afterwards by his ingenuity enabled the prisoners to turn the tables upon their enemies.

"Ha, my young comrade," said Raleigh, heartily, "methought there was the making of a sailor and the marring of a squire in you."

"You gave me good advice, sir," said Mark, low and briefly.

"Of that kind that no one ever follows," replied Raleigh. "Have you been at home?" he added, kindly, drawing the youth apart in the desire to prepare him for what had taken place there.

"I have," said Mark, "long enough to know how utterly all is lost to me. Sir, if you have any fresh adventure on which to send a man who has wrecked all—"

"How!" said Raleigh, "would you be off again, when yonder sweet little maiden has been waiting and watching for you all these years?"

A look of intense pain passed over his face as he answered,—

"Not for me. That is all at an end."

Raleigh looked unsatisfied at him, but it was no time when the great captains of England could spend many moments upon a young man's love passages, and he returned again to the Council of War.

Nor did the two young men again meet him until after that great engagement in the Straits of Dover, which was compared to a morris dance. The Santa Clara held her part gallantly in the figure, and in that terrible storm, which did the work of destruction of the enemy, and protection of England, as no heart of flesh, no vessel of oak, could ever have done, she put into the same harbor with Raleigh's ship, and then it was that Sir Walter Raleigh heard Lionel Stafford's tale in its fulness, and understood from him how Mark's bitter enmity had astonished him, and how generously it had been laid aside in the time of peril; how Lionel now could not understand the angry mood which the young man seemed to have so much difficulty in repressing, even while so absolutely fulfilling his hopes by the promise of his sister.

"His sister!" exclaimed Sir Walter.

"Who else could it be but the grave, calm, admirable Grace? I thought his passion strange and uncalled-for, since though her nature be lofty, and I may be beneath her in fortunes, certainly my birth needed no such contempt."

"Where is the lad?" cried Sir Walter, more than half laughing; "let me see him. O! that cross purposes should endure full four years! Where is Master Lynch? Send him to me instantly."

"Sir," cried Stafford, greatly discomposed, "you do not deem that there is any doubt of—"

Raleigh shook himself free of the alarmed startled Stafford, and, waving him back, went to meet Mark Lynch, who, disturbed in the depths of his cabin by a message from Sir Walter, was making his gloomy way through a storm of rain to obey the summons.

"Mr. Lynch," said Raleigh, "I find that I have to congratulate you on having won an admirable brother-in-law."

"You know more of my family affairs than I do," said Mark; "but I am amazed if my sister Grace has taken this time for being wooed."

"Nay," said Raleigh, "as I understood, it was you yourself that promised her."

"I, sir! let me ask who has dared thus to make use of my name?"

"The bridegroom himself,—no other than your captain, Lionel Stafford, who told of your—"

Mark broke in, heedless of all respect,—"Stafford! Stafford! Sir, you are under some marvellous error. He, as I now believe, unwittingly, stole the heart of my betrothed, and to him I yielded her."

"He believes that it was your sister that you granted, and only wondered at your grudging manner."

"My sister!" gasped Mark. "Let me see him, sir. He can be under no such delusion! It is you—pardon me, Sir Walter—who cannot imagine the—the way I have caused myself to be treated. My sister—. But it is all one to me,—the other poor child loves him. The misery he has brought—"

"I think," said Sir Walter kindly, "that if a stranger may judge of the countenance of a maiden as certain names were spoken, it was not that of Stafford that made Mistress Colyton blush and glow, with a tear in her bright eye."

Mark was now spurred into one of his impetuous fits. He strode on to the little inn parlor where Lionel was pacing up and down in almost equal agitation.—Catching him by the hand, he abruptly demanded,—

"Lionel, which is it?"

"Mark! can you doubt? Did you deem me all these years a traitor? Can you imagine that I could prefer that little—" he happily caught himself up before he had become uncomplimentary— "that pretty little child to one so noble, so deeply thinking, as your sister?"

Mark caught him by the hand, and wrung it as he had wrung it in the storm three months ago.

"And this—this explains all!" exclaimed Lionel. "This was the cause of your displeasure! It was from your own heart that you were tearing what you gave to me!"

What skills it to say more? The Armada's battles have been better fought than ever we could fight them; and as for the affairs of the mouth of the Leamy, no one will doubt that Mark easily made his peace with Amise, and that when her ring was restored it was once for all, and also that a quiet, undemonstrative, but very deep love had all along existed in the heart of Grace for the brave and gentle sailor. His share in the treasures of the Santa Clara was enough to form the foundation of his fortunes, and make it not otherwise than prudent that both the marriages should take place at once, and Sir Walter Raleigh came down to Fardel for the express purpose of giving away the two brides.

Old Mrs. Lynch, hearing the name of Mark about the house again, became calm and satisfied, and under the tender care of Amise lived years enough in her gentle feebleness to soften on her son's mind that bitter sense of undutiful cruelty that had caused him so much agony on his first return.

THE END.

CHANGES OF THE EARTH'S SURFACE.—The accounts of the effect of the great earthquake in Peru are interesting, because they show something of the agencies by which the face of the earth must frequently, in past times, have been altered. How islands which were mountains have been raised in the sea, and how they sank down again we have read in the cosmological treatises, but we have in this Peruvian earthquake very remarkable confirmation of the theory that the great changes upon the globe have been the result of subterranean commotions. In Peru the face of the country has been changed. Hills have been sunk down, lakes have been made where there were high and dry lands, rivers have dried up in their courses, and new streams run where there were none before. The incidents of this calamity shows on a small scale what might have been done over a great scale before the era of man's occupation of the earth. In the Sandwich Islands it has been noted that there has been a subsidence of a portion of the shore, varying from eight inches to seven feet, the change commencing immediately after the great disaster in Peru. To philosophers these matters are of very great interest.

A countryman, walking along the streets of New York, found his progress stopped by a close barricade of lumber. "What is that for?" said he to a person in the street. "Oh, that's to stop the cholera." "Ah, I have often heard of the board of health, but I never saw one before."

KEEPING SWEET POTATOES.

A correspondent of the Country Gentleman, writing from Ohio, who says he kept sweet potatoes in good sound condition eleven months, gives the following directions:

1. The sweet potato should be gathered in dry weather, if practicable, after arriving at as much maturity as the season allows. A frost that will kill the vines simply, does not necessarily destroy or injure the tubers; but it is injurious to let the remain long in the ground after that circumstance, if the weather should be cold and damp.

2. In handling them, avoid bruising them by throwing them violently against each other, or by any other means, as this will induce decay more than any other mechanical operation. They should be handled as carefully as eggs. A tuber may be cut with a knife without injury to its keeping, but a bruise is very often fatal.

3. To keep them in sound condition, it is necessary that they should have a dry atmosphere, a temperature of 55° to 60°, with as little variation as possible, and sufficient ventilation to keep the atmosphere dry, but avoid fluctuations in temperature.

4. When placed in these circumstances, which should be immediately after they are gathered, let them entirely alone, and do not disturb them except for use or market, as any handling or assorting after once put in the place to keep, hastens decay.

They may be put in bins of any size, holding hundreds of bushels if desired.—If packed in very dry sand, they will not wilt quite so much but this involves more labor and expense, and does not perhaps preserve them more certainly. Generally, cellars are poor places to keep them, as they are liable to be damp and poorly ventilated.

Should the potato become damp at any time, as is sometimes the case soon after storing, it need not cause alarm. It is caused by the potatoes being colder than the atmosphere around them, and so condensing the moisture in the air. A small increase of heat will soon restore the dryness.

HOW TO GRAFT GRAPE VINES.—A North Carolina farmer gives under the head of "Something Worth Knowing," the following: Cut the graft sometime between the 1st of December and the last of January; pack them away in a box, bedded in wet sand and keep them in a cellar until the leaves of the vine to be grafted are half grown—any how until the sap has ceased to flow. Then dig down below the collar, or the point where the roots of the vine radiate, and hunt for the largest and most thrifty, cut them loose from the collar and with pegs bring them to a perpendicular position. Cut off the end smoothly and graft just as you would an apple tree, leaving at least two buds or eyes and then place a large hill around it, reaching to the top of the graft, covering the upper bud an inch with loose dirt, free from clods; and then, if the graft fails to grow, it is because the grafts had lost their vitality before the work was done. You may have a vine for each runner of the vine grafted—sometimes half a dozen. If the roots are thrifty, they will grow the first summer from 8 to 16 feet in length, and you can thus have a crop of grapes the second year.

Wild vines are the best to graft in because indigenous to the soil in which they grow, and know better than a tame variety at what depth to strike their roots.

PERUVIAN MUMMIES.—The statement that during the recent earthquake at Arica, Peru, five hundred mummies were thrown to the surface, is confirmed by travelers, who report that the desert hills in that region are filled with the desiccated bodies of the aborigines. The preservation of these remains of mortality is attributed to the climate, and also to the soil, which is impregnated with nitre. The bodies of the natives are interred in shallow graves, and the wind removes the light sands covering them, so that even in ordinary times hundreds of so-called mummies, wrapped in coarse grass matting, or in crumbling nets, have been exposed.

ROYAL FAMILY EXPENSES.

The expenses of a family are illustrated by the amount paid annually for the support of Queen Victoria and her household. The Queen receives $1,925,000 a year; the Prince of Wales, $500,000 and wants more; the Duke of Edinburg $10,000; the Crown Princess of Prussia $10,000; Princess Louis of Hesse, $30,000; Princess Christiana, $30,000; the Duchess of Cambridge, $30,000; the Duke of Cambridge, $60,000 besides $17,500 as commander-in-chief. Besides all these, the Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz (Duchess of Cambridge's oldest daughter) receives $15,000 a year; the Princess of Teck, $25,000. Then there are the younger children of the Queen still to be provided for, and the Princess of Wales' children.

SALEM, N. C.,

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1868.

PROCLAMATION.

By the Governor of North Carolina.

WHEREAS, THE PRESIDENT OF the United States has, by Proclamation set apart the 26th day of November as a day of thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God for His benefits and blessings so graciously and bountifully bestowed upon our country, for the abundance of the harvests and

WHEREAS, it is made my duty by law to set apart a day in every year, and by proclamation give notice thereof, 'as a day of solemn public thanksgiving to Almighty God for past blessings, and of supplication for his continued kindness and favor as a State and nation.'

Therefore I, William W. Holden, Governor of North Carolina, do proclaim the same day to thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God throughout the State of North Carolina and respectfully and earnestly request all good citizens of the State to join in the observance of the same.

Done at our city of Raleigh, on the eleventh day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight, and in the 93rd year of American Independence.

By the Governor:
W. W. HOLDEN.
R. M. Douglas,
Private Secretary.

☞ The expedition reported to be fitting out in this country against Cuba with a view of the annexation of that island to the United States, accounts of which appear in this issue, are believed by some to be sensation stories, while others seem disposed to give credence to the reality of the filibuster movement.

Our readers will remember there was a movement on foot some time since, in this country, for the purchase of Cuba, and now, who knows what the final result may be? At present, we give the accounts of the filibuster movement for what they are worth.

Meteoric Showers.—The papers every where, in this country, speak of fine meteoric displays from midnight till dawn, on one or two nights. A number of our citizens and neighbors witnessed it.

☞ Gov. Holden has set apart the 26th instant to be observed as a day of thanksgiving and praise. See proclamation.

The Railroad.—It will be seen, by reference to our advertising columns, that books of subscription for the second division of the W. N. C. Railroad have been opened, for the extension of the road from Salem westward.

The Legislature.

This body convened on Monday. In the Senate liberty was no quorum, while in the House sufficient members appeared to make up the requisite number. Both Houses then adjourned until Tuesday.

PARIS, Nov. 16.—Baron James Rothschilde, the head of the great Banking house, is dead.

The Mordstown of our enlightened geographies is a myth. A late report on the Norwegian fisheries says that it is so little the liberals of by the inhabitants that they pass and repass it in their sail vessels at all states of the tide except at certain times in the winter season, and far from coming within its range, it appears to be a favorite resort of the fish of the country, and the fishermen reap a rich pecuniary harvest from its bosom. The greatest rate of the tide in winter does not exceed six miles an hour."

Many Tennessee papers are placing the name of Andrew Johnson at the head of their columns as candidate for the next Governor of Tennessee. There is said to be little doubt that he will receive the democratic nomination.

The General Result.

The Judiciary.

Chief Justice Chase in Washington City, on Monday, delivered the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Hepburn vs. Griswold, which involves the constitutionality of the legal tender act. The decision was rendered by a bare majority of the Court, the Chief Justice and Justices Nelson, Grier, Clifford and Field dissenting. The opinion of the majority was delivered by Justice Strong, and that of the minority by Justice Field. The decision declares the legal tender act unconstitutional as to debts contracted before the passage of the act, but constitutional as to debts contracted since the passage of the act.

Dried Fruit in North Carolina.

The good people of Stokes, Forsyth, Guilford and adjoining counties have discovered that there are other crops worth attending to besides the great staple of tobacco, or even like more necessary articles whom public subscriptions are solicited.

LAST WARNING!

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

WE have sent out several notices, requesting our friends and customers to come and settle up, and I also have paid officers to go over the county and settle up with those who owe me, so as to put them to no expense, but so far but few have paid me. Now, my friends, I must tell you that I have been compelled to work hard to pay for the goods which we sold you, and if you will come to our Store between this and the and pay me one-fifth, (or more if you choose,) of what you owe me, and the balance as the law directs, you will save yourselves trouble and expense. But if you do not pay by above required, after the 1st of January I will dispose of your notes and accounts. This demand is very moderate one, therefore let us straighten up our affairs, my friends, as soon as possible.

Interest will be charged on all accounts.

Corn, Wheat, Rye, Oats, Beeswax and other produce will be taken.

E. L. HEGE.

"A Complete Pictorial History of the Times."

"The best, cheapest and most successful Family Paper in the Union"

HARPER'S WEEKLY,

SPLENDIDLY ILLUSTRATED.

Critical Notices of the Press.

The model newspaper of our country—complete in all the departments of an American Family Paper—Harper's Weekly has earned for itself a right to its title, "a journal of civilization."—New York Evening Post.

Our future historians will enrich themselves out of Harper's Weekly long after writers, and printers, and publishers are turned to dust.—New York Evangelist.

The articles upon public questions which appear in Harper's Weekly from week to week, form a remarkable series of brief political essays. They are distinguished by clear and pointed statement, by good common sense, by independence and breadth of view. They are the expression of mature conviction, high principle, and strong feeling, and take their place among the best newspaper writing of the time.—North American Review, Boston, Mass.

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

Critical Notices of the Press.

We must refer in terms of eulogy to the high tone and varied excellence of Harper's Magazine—a journal of a monthly circulation of about 170,000 copies—in whose pages are to be found some of the choicest light and general reading of the day. We speak of this work as an evidence of the culture of the American people, and the popularity it has acquired it merited. Each number contains fully 144 pages of reading matter, appropriately illustrated with good wood cuts; and it combines in itself the two monthly and the more philosophical quarterly, blended with the best features of the daily journal. It has great power in the dissemination of a love of pure literature.—Trubner's Guide to American Literature, London.

We can account for its success only by the simple fact that it meets precisely the popular taste, furnishing a variety of pleasing and instructive reading for all.—Zion's Herald, Boston.

HARPER'S BAZAR.

A supplement containing numerous full-sized patterns of useful articles accompanies the paper every fortnight, and occasionally an elegantly Colored Fashion Plate.

Harper's Bazar contains 16 folio pages of the size of Harper's Weekly, printed on superfine calendered paper, and is published weekly.

Critical Notices of the Press.

Harper's Bazar contains, besides pictures, patterns, etc., a variety of matter of especial use and interest to the family; articles on health, dress, and housekeeping in all its branches; its editorial matter is specially adapted to the circle it is intended to interest and instruct; and it has, besides, good stories and literary matter of merit. It is not surprising that the journal, with such features, has achieved in a short time an immense success; for something of its kind was desired in thousands of families, and its publishers have filled the demand.—New York Evening Post.

Whether we consider its claims as based upon the elegance and superiority of the paper, its typographical appearance, the taste and judgment displayed in the engravings, or the literary contributions contained in its pages, we unhesitatingly pronounce it to be superior in each and every particular to any other similar publication here or abroad.—Philadelphia Legal Intelligencer.

We know of no other English or American journal of fashion that can pretend to approach it in completeness and variety.—N. Y. Times.

It has the merit of being sensible, of conveying instruction, of giving excellent patterns in every department, and of being well stocked with good reading matter.—Watchman and Recorder.

To dress according to Harper's Bazar will be the aim and ambition of the women of America.—Boston Transcript.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

ENLARGED AND BEAUTIFIED.

This "oldest and best of the Literary Weeklies," has been recently ENLARGED AND BEAUTIFIED. It is weekly embellished with Engravings—and its NOVELETS, STORIES, SKETCHES, &c., are not surpassed.

It has just commenced two splendid Novelets—"THE QUEEN OF THE SAVANNAH," by Gustave Aimard; and "ST. GEORGE AND THE DRAGON," a Novel of Society, by Elizabeth Prescott, the author of "How a Woman Had Her Way," &c.

New Novelets will continually succeed each other. Among those already on hand, or in progress, are, "THE MYSTERY OF THE REEFS," a powerful story by Mrs. Hosmer; and "CUT ADRIFT, OR, THE TIDE OF FATE," by Amanda M. Douglas.

A copy of the Large and Beautiful Premium Steel Engraving—"The Song of Home at Sea"—engraved expressly for our readers, at a cost for the engraving alone of nearly $1000—will be sent (post-paid) to every full ($2.50) subscriber, and to every person sending on a club! This is a truly beautiful engraving!

TO NEW SUBSCRIBERS.—MARK!—New Subscribers for 1869 will have their subscriptions dated back to the paper of September 19th, until the large edition of that date is exhausted. In that paper we commenced two Novelets—"The Queen of the Savannah," and "St. George and the Dragon." This will be fifteen papers in addition to the regular weekly numbers for 1869—or nearly sixteen months in all! When our extra edition is exhausted, the names of all new subscribers for 1869 will be entered on our list the very week they are received. Of course those who send in their names the earliest will get the greatest number of extra papers.

Owing to the unusually liberal character of this offer, we shall be compelled to adhere strictly to its terms.

THE HOME JOURNAL.

The Home Journal is one of the best weeklies published in the United States, and its present management is especially marked by literary ability and good taste.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Home Journal comes to us greatly enlarged and improved in every way—indeed it is now a far better paper than ever before.—Native Virginian, (Orange C. H., Va.)

A great improvement has taken place in the Home Journal. One would have thought that General Morris and N. P. Willis could have produced a surpassingly fine society journal and light literature weekly, but I think you will agree with me that it has advanced considerably under its present editors.—Rev. Dr. Deems in Christian Advocate, (Richmond, Va.)

There is no other journal that comes so nearly up to our liking. It brings its readers front a front with all that is elegant, refined, intellectual, elevating and social, without the usual stopping and catering to the baser sensational elements.—The Ballston, (N. Y.) Journal.

DRESS UP RIGHT!

An entirely New Clothing and Merchant Tailoring Establishment.

THE subscriber takes pleasure in announcing to his old friends and numerous customers, that he has reopened his Merchant Tailoring Establishment, in the Store-house formerly occupied by R. Gray, South-West corner of Court-house square, in Winston, N. C., where he has a good assortment of READY-MADE CLOTHING, CLOTHS, CASSIMERES, VESTINGS, TRIMMINGS and GENTS and BOYS FURNISHING GOODS.

Also a superior assortment of Salem Cassimeres and Jeans, which he offers at manufacturer's prices.

He is also prepared to furnish Clothing to Merchants, made of these goods, by the wholesale, at very low prices, as it is his intention to establish a Clothing Manufactory at this place, should he meet with sufficient encouragement. He is satisfied that the people of the South will have to commence the manufacturing of every description of goods, if they wish to become a prosperous and self-sustaining people.

He has employed some of the best workmen in the country, and is prepared to execute custom work, in the best and most fashionable styles, and at the shortest notice.

Satisfaction invariably guaranteed.

He is agent for the sale of the famous Singer Sewing Machine, which can be seen at his store. They are warranted to give entire satisfaction. Come and see them work before purchasing.

☞ As the subscriber desires to do business entirely on the cash system, he most earnestly requests those indebted to him to come forward by the 1st day of January, and settle their accounts.

☞ Country produce will be taken in exchange for goods and work.

☞ A call is respectfully solicited.

THE CAROLINA FARMER.

BELIEVING THAT THE INTERESTS of the Farmers and Planters of this section demand the publication of a periodical to be devoted to the advancement of Agriculture in the two Carolinas, we have determined to establish such a periodical under the title of THE CAROLINA FARMER, and will issue the first number as soon as a sufficient number of subscribers are obtained to pay a reasonable share of the expense of publication.

The FARMER will be issued monthly at $2 00 per annum, in advance; will contain not less than thirty-two large double-column pages of reading matter, bound in handsome covers; and in typographical execution will not be surpassed by any Agricultural Monthly in the country.

Being determined to do whatever energy will accomplish in making the FARMER worthy the support of the intelligent Planters of North Carolina; and desiring to introduce it into every county in those States, we wish to employ active Agents at every Post Office, to whom the most liberal inducements will be offered.

Our exchanges in the two Carolinas will [illegible] a few incertions in their advertising columns, with such editorial comment as they think the probable value of such a prodical as we propose publishing may justify.

FARMERS, READ!

ALL KINDS OF

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.

I HAVE the Agency from various Manufacturers of Agricultural Implements, in the States of North Carolina, Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, New York and Ohio, for the following:

Horse Powers, Wheat Threshers and Cleaners, Mowing Machines, Mowers and Reapers, Cider Mills, Smut Machines, Wheat Fans, Fodder Cutters, Corn Shellers, Sorgo Mills, Ploughs, Harrows, Horserakes, Cultivators, Wheat Drills, &c., &c., &c.

BUCKEYE

REAPER AND MOWER.

The Buckeye Reaper and Mower that I exhibited and sold last season has been still further improved since last year, and I have the Agency for the Counties of Forsyth, Stokes, Surry and Yadkin.

Farmers in general—and every where,
Who want a Reaper or Mower,
Will look for one with a history fair,
That does its work well, and with little repair,
Can be kept in good running order,
They want a machine that's been thoroughly tried
In all kinds of grass and of grain,
On the up-lands and low-lands, and on the hill-side,
Where horses may walk and the driver may ride,
And the work shall be always the same.
The BUCKEYE machine has met this demand,
So say the thousand who use it;
For more than ten years, and all over this land
Its record's been known, and its merits well scanned,
As proof against all who abuse it.

IMPROVED CIDER MILL.

I shall have three different kinds of Cider Mills, and am already receiving orders for the coming season. I have the agency for the Counties of Forsyth, Surry, Stokes and Yadkin.
